Subject: Re: Should the community have a "say"?
Posted by Blazer on Sun, 27 Jan 2008 08:18:53 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Sadly the nature of "communities" on the internet is they are all take and no give. As in they will gladly use any and all resources provided for them, but when it comes to contributing anything real, especially money, they remain silent, either because they actually don't really care, or they assume that the problem will get solved without their help. These are usually the same people that complain the loudest.

Pretty similar to people who bitch about the government, yet they do not register to vote, but will gladly stand in line for welfare

EDIT: P.S. Since you started the poll, I assume there is something you want a "say" in? If not, can you give examples of what you think people might want a say in (forum themes, who to ban, what software to run)? Just wondering