You people, living in North America, live in different conditions to us.

You don't say? Imagine that!

cnc95fan wrote on Tue, 29 January 2008 16:20 Lots of stuff that happens where you are, is "weird shit" to us. Heh a lot of it is pretty weird to us as well cnc95fan wrote on Tue, 29 January 2008 16:20 The way we see it (I probably speak for a lot of people here, but not all) is that America is in the shits, we hear of mass murderings every few months America is a huge country, with some very large cities, so yeah there is bound to be crime and there will be mass murderings world-wide until the human race evolves and we have a worldwide utopian society (don't hold your breath).

cnc95fan wrote on Tue, 29 January 2008 16:20 people in your own countries are making documentaries about the situation of America ATM, and they provide good points. Michael Moore is not "people". He is one guy whose goal is to make American govt look bad. He has made some valid points, but he has also made a big deal about a lot of nothing. Does he do it because he cares, or to rile people up to pay to see his movies? Either way you are getting a very narrow-minded view of things, so you shouldn't accept everything you see/hear from the "media" and shockumentary guys as fact.

cnc95fan wrote on Tue, 29 January 2008 16:20 You live in a false sence of freedom (not Canada) which is run by a 4 year term dictator. I know you have governors to do this, that and the other, but he's the man in charge, amrite? First off. "LOL". I find it amazing that so many people think that our President is an insane power monger with his finger on the button, and we are all slaves to his whims. Let me explain this in a very basic way...the president is little more than a figurehead. He doesn't personally draft up laws, he doesn't personally "run the country". He has panels of advisors, boards, congress, etc, (who are elected by the people), that do all of that, and he pretty much just oversees and makes final decisions. For the other folks who want to jump in and correct me...remember that I am explaining this in the most basic terms, so while it is technically "inaccurate", it should make sense to someone who obviously has no idea how our govt works, and is a lot better than the general foreigners thinking that we live in a dictatorship and the president could roll out of bed and hit a switch to launch nukes if he wanted to
