

---

Subject: Don't bottle it up

Posted by Cee100 on Tue, 18 Mar 2008 22:34:16 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

I've come home from work this evening with a heavy heart, and before i go playing I wanted you to read this.

This evening my colleage at work had a policeman come see her about an email passed onto them from a virtual world site <http://www.there.com/> stating that someone in her house used this site and passed an email on that was found by the "threat" team which stated that the sender was about to do something silly with his life!

Just recently in the UK news have been stories of suicides coming from such sites, but in this case it looks like the lad has issues about whats going on with him at the moment in his life and is saying to the addressee that thanks to him he's going to upset his family and friends as he "can't take it anymore".

My friend was very upset, initially the thought of paedophiles came to mind given the nature of the words virutal world until we read the email.

Her husband is a security guard in Iraq and is away for long spells and she is left to raise the kids of which there are 4 remaining in the house. They want for nothing except for a bit of freedom as all youngsters do and she was telling me that he was home recently completely blocked out of his head and he's 15!

All parents do worry for their kids particularly when they get to this age and it only takes that one drink too many or someone pushing a drug your way that could do a lot of permanent damage resulting in loss of life and a family made to pick up the pieces.

I let her go home early to get it sorted and I hope its easy to do.

The reason i'm sharing this with you is if any of you are young enough to relate to whats going on here, have problems yourselves and can't bring yourself to talk to your mum and dad, don't expect it to be solved in a bottle! Find a friend or family member, go to the doctor or talk to an online buddy you know, speak to me if you think it would help.

Sometimes problems you think are so big can be solved in an instant, don't hurt the ones that love you, they brought you into this world to do better than themselves.

XXX

---