You're approaching this from a logical perspective but making the assumption that someone who wants to commit suicide is logical flawed.

In the cases I've seen suicide has been the only shaft of light in an otherwise dark and miserable existence. I'm totally against the idea of suicide, but that's just a small idea of how it can feel for someone who is in that position, and just saying "grow up" or "see what's around you" doesn't work.
