

---

Subject: Devinoch and Maxis Part Ways.

Posted by Carl on Thu, 06 Mar 2003 17:27:15 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Put Simply, sega is a worthless company. After the DreamCast failed they really had nothing left. The dreamcast WAS an awesome system. Better than the PS2 in most respects in fact, graphics wise, according to most benchmarks. The problem SEGA had was not having enough games for the thing in the early stages of it's release, combined with the fact that the playstation already had a GIANT foothold on the market, and the GameCube and XBox AND PS2 WERE already in development. So, SEGA, in all it's n00bness decided to forgo the Console market and stay strictly to games. Now tell me how a company, who didn't even have enough games for it's premier system, could possibly make enough games for systems it didn't even develop? Thus, over the last couple of years SEGA has fallen into financial ruin. So i bring you back to the two points i am making. A) SEGA is really just a worthless piece of shit, void of any real value other than its name, of which even that now is nearly worthless and of course the fact that the first ever cnc game was on sega genesis and B) EA buying SEGA wouldn't really turn any great tides, or give EA any kind of monopoly. They would probably end up shutting down what little is left of sega (what, maybe two studios?) and taking any and all assets they had. Anyways, theres my MORE than two cents

EDIT: So really SEGA is just one of those "small companies being eaten up to make more money"

---