Sorry but it had to be said!

I've said before suicide is not a logical state of mind there is definatly an imbalance in the chemicals, ergo, teenage suicides because of the hormone surges, elder people because of how depression has got a hold of them for some reason or because of a proper mental inbalance.

Most people who get to a doctor quickly can be treated for their symtoms, agreed though, its not just a concoction of pills that will sort out your problems, you need to get in control of your life and get stronger and believe in yourself once more...

Or because others keep putting you down until you actually start to believe that you arn't worth anything, and soon start to believe that you actually cause others trouble, so you decide to remove yourself for the good of others.
