

---

Subject: Re: No more space shuttles after 2010, NASA cutting 80-90% of jobs.
Posted by The Executor on Thu, 03 Apr 2008 15:57:25 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Blazer you lamo....I am for #3 I think.

I think that we have done all we can in space really. I mean we went into space, made a telescope, and went to the moon several times, we have also sent out probes and other things out into space including a Mars mission. So what in space is there left to do?

Blazer wrote on Wed, 02 April 2008 16:08TBH I would live on mars, as long as they had internet - LOL. Seriously though I probably would, as I'm not the type of person that goes to "the mall" every week etc. I spend most of my time indoors, and most of my free time at my PC. That's probably "sad" by some standards, but ideal for living on another planet where the atmosphere is toxic. Of course Crimmy would have to want to come with me

That is because you are sleeping all the time you nub.

---