Yeah, I mean, I took Spanish as an elective for many years, including some exposure during middle school. I even got a 5 on the Advanced Placement Exam (that's the highest you can get), yet I'm nowhere near fluent in Spanish. Fluency, vocabulary, and proper grammar are not necessarily improved through the same type or amount of exposure to the language. It also helps considerably if you start to learn other languages when you're younger, because of various critical and sensitive periods in the brain's development of language skills. If MadRockz tones down the 1337, give him a break on his other mistakes, unless you really can't understand him.
