$50's versus thousands really, would if I could but so far doesn't look like its in the paperwork.

Well, it's a start. Many grassroots corporate overhauls begin in shareholder meetings.

You feel strongly about the company, so I think that you ought to consider purchasing one stock, so you get the opportunity to be able to participate a little more in the company. Even if you make a complaint on a board like this, mentioning that you are a shareholder should prick the ears of any company worth its salt. The fact that you bought into the company shows that you are not just some 'gaming kiddie' with an axe to grind, but someone who has money, and can actually grasp some concepts of 'business' .

Plus, you'll more than likely find other shareholders that have similar feelings as you do, and that's how it all starts. Small bloc's of dissent slowly grow into a major thorn in a company's side if they are left unchecked.

It'll certainly be more productive than downloading illegal copies, and it can be kind of fun too.
