

---

Subject: Re: Day of Silence

Posted by Ryu on Fri, 25 Apr 2008 18:09:11 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

[LAWStarbuzz wrote on Fri, 25 April 2008 17:21]Quackpunk wrote on Thu, 24 April 2008 19:09<http://www.dayofsilence.org/content/getinformation.html>

Will anyone be participating in this day of silence? While I'm at it, is anyone gay or lesbian in this community?

Oh why don't you just give me a free assbat instead? How is a silent protest even come close to solving the problem? It raises awareness of the issue no doubt but that's all it does. The problem remains.

Ryu wrote on Fri, 25 April 2008 11:50Cheesesoda is right, America is the LAND OF THE FREE so Homosexual rights should be in their law, religion can go fuck itself for once.

There are three major religions right now and fortunately or unfortunately, one of them is dominant in America. As long as this religion flourishes, there will always be many self-righteous beings who would look down on homosexuals. Then count the other religions that forbid homosexuality.

I remember not having any tolerance for homosexuals when I was a devout practicing Christian. Then you have the closet-religious who could care less about their god but nevertheless, feel threatened by the whole issue for no fucking reason whatsoever.

Then you have to count in the non-religious who dislike homosexuals just because it is weird or "wrong." Whatever the hell that means...

Then there are those religious folks who don't dislike homosexuals.

Seriously, people should not care what others choose to do. It's none of anyone's bloody business.

Cheers for backing up my point that Amerika truly isn't the land of the free, Because it's too focused on being Christian.

Hurr hurr.

---