I found this pretty shocking. It's just before the French Open, her favourite tournament that she's won for the last three years in a row.

I will really miss seeing her, she is such a talented tennis player. She plays tennis similar to how it used to be played, before power was everything (although she has plenty of power too). Also, it means there will be nobody else in the top ten with a single handed backhand. Henin's backhand is a thing of beauty, whether down the line or cross court. Nobody else on the women's tour plays like her, it sucks.
