Someone said this in college today, and I had to totally agree with them. Dispite the fact that being on the dole isn't good for society.

When you're on the dole, everything is paid for. You get a house, food and could probably run a small car.

When you have a job, even though you're earning money. You spend about 8 hours a day earning that money and it's not easy. You have to pay for: food, bills, your house (mortgage), your car (to get to work) and everything is taxed. The government takes all your money away from you and you're struggling to pay for essentials.

While you're struggling, the people on the dole are doing jack all have no worries. So what's better? Living on the couch, going out for a drink with some freinds? or working 8 hours a day and worrying about money all the time.
