On Monday, I reiterated this shocking but true fact: Democratic leaders see George W. Bush as a bigger threat to the United States than any foreign enemy. They'll cause any sort of damage to the nation, and fix it later when they get their power back. So when Democrats heard reports that our brave military forces had cornered and killed Saddam Hussein's two sadistic sons Uday and Qusay, they said, "Aw, darn it." It's the same reaction they had to Tom Brokaw's recent interview with Chief U.S. Weapons Inspector David Kay.

Kay said that he's seen plenty of WMDs found in Iraq, but that the administration is waiting to release it. The administration may wait as long as six months to tell us of the caches they've found - a time frame that would put the revelation of the weapons every one from the UN to Bill Clinton to the EU to EIB knows Saddam had smack dab in the middle of the Democrat primary season. Senators Pat Roberts (R-KS) and John Warner (R-VA) said they'd seen the same stuff and agreed it couldn't yet be released. You see, Democrats have nothing new or alternative to offer that's positive. They've positioned themselves so that they can only succeed if the nation suffers.

I'm not saying they want another terrorist attack, but they're ready to pounce when one inevitably happens. Contrarily, good news hurts the liberal left. For example: if these two thugs have indeed assumed Mesopotamian temperature, you're going to have reduced attacks on American troops - and that means the Democratic reliance on blowing our casualties all out of proportion will be reduced. It's widely believed that Uday and Qusay were directing the attacks on our troops, this guerilla warfare and these sniper attacks, so this will prove a devastating blow to pro-Saddam forces while at the same time encourage average Iraqis to accelerate the pace of rebuilding.

Meanwhile, you have Terry McAuliffe out there saying Bush is "the biggest liar in presidential history," and Dick Gephardt attacking Bush's foreign policy as "machismo and arrogant unilateralism" in the mold of John Wayne. Can you imagine Kofi Annan or Jacques Chirac in any one of The Duke's roles? Gephardt's remarks to the San Francisco Bar Association attempt to rewrite history just like these attempts to deny Saddam had any WMDs and to claim that Bush promised a "cakewalk" in Iraq. Yet on the very day the Democrats think they see their big chance to smear this president, we nab two Aces from the Iraqi leadership. You think we need NATO and the UN when we are NATO and the UN, Dick? You think we don't need machismo and John Wayne? This is why you guys just don't get it.

Near the end of Tuesday's broadcast, a caller asked me just how the Democrats and the press are going to react to the news of Uday and Qusay's deaths. Their reaction will be, "Damn it! Damn it to hell! Aw, gee, why did they have to get those two now? We were on a roll, Bush was incompetent, whole war was blown, and now we got those two - damn."

That's going to be the reaction of the Democrats, and the media will pretty much join that reaction, and then there will be the questions, "Is it really them, or is Bush just saying it? We want to see the bodies. Bush has lied about so much, Bush has made up so much, let's see the bodies. Why didn't he get them sooner? How come it's taken this long? This is an incompetent president. We bombed them three times, how many bombs have we wasted? How many cruise missiles did we waste? How many soldiers' lives did it take to get these two?"

And folks, the attacks on the American military will probably drop considerably because these two clowns were leading the insurgent movement of the Saddam Fedayeen. The liberals are going to be devastated. Remember, whatever is good news for America, is bad news for them.
