I think I may have forgotten something. For some reason, I entirely forgot about prisons/punishments in Middle East countries.

Punishments in Saudi Arabia still resemble those from a 1000 years ago. Limbs being amputated, public lashings and public beheadings. And in Iran, you have public hangings for petty crimes (for example: being homosexual). And the Iranian public hangings involve the use of a giant crane that would otherwise be used to haul huge pieces of metal/sheets during building projects.

And let's not forget the ridiculous number of executions made in China each year. Nobody even can guess how many innocent people were put to death. And figure this: the death row in China is the largest contributor to their national pool of organ donors.
