I wish that were the case, because then I'd have someone else to blame for it.

Most of this is my doing; I frequent yard sales, and buy stuff I don't need. The rest of the crap is either given to me by family or friends, all of whom must secretly hate my guts.

I'll either Craigslist the stuff, or dump it all in a public park or something and hope a kleptomaniacal dumpster diver finds it.

Hell, maybe I'll just rent a Bobcat for a day, and dig a big hole in my neighbors back yard, and dump the junk in there, and bury it. He's on vacation, and he's an asshole. Ironically, he holds garage sales often, many of which I frequent. It'd likely be cheaper than making multiple trips to the dump, gas prices and all.
