

---

Subject: BF42 mapping? You could be a winner, read insert.

Posted by Javaxcx on Thu, 24 Jul 2003 10:25:48 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

maj.boredom

Do Umpires let the public know who their favorite Baseball team is?

Of course not. If an Umpire did that, and made the news public, then it can be expected that a bias may be placed on in-game decisions such as a slide to first base, or what not.

Quote:Does the moderator in a debate say whom they want to win?

Of course they would (Mind you, not as crudly as saying "blah is going to win"). Just because someone holds a position of power on a forum doesn't mean they aren't entitled to publically voice their opinion. Thats also usually why a forum has more than 1 moderator. So that there is a difference of opinion in all matters. But take this one, for example:

CaptKurt publically attacks Aircraftkiller though a link in his signature. Like most people, Aircraftkiller retaliates and holds a resentment toward said CaptKurt. Since Crimson and Aircraftkiller are friends, they would communicate between each other (or Crimson may reach her own opinion) that CaptKurt is a weak and pathetic individual for resorting to placing a webpage dedicated to insulting Aircraftkiller (a friend) on public display. Moderator or not, Crimson is allowed (and encouraged) to agree with anyone about any statement made. Her attachment to power on the forum doesn't deter that. CaptKurt is in violation of the ToS of these forums, and I believe it is a great use of self control and tolerance between all the adminisration that he is not banned already.

Of course, you're entitled to your opinion of the matter, which you've made quite clear.

---