
Subject: Re: We need to crack down on criminals as much as possible now a days!
Posted by R315r4z0r on Sun, 22 Jun 2008 23:39:52 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

No don't worry, I have no reason to believe your father is a bad person.

It is just that every single time I have encountered a police officer, they just seem to be a total jerk that takes advantage of their authority.

I remember this one time after graduation I believe 2 years ago. It was about 11:30 and I was just turning off my computer. My room was dark and my window was open. I could hear the sounds of teenagers laughing and partying in the public park across the street from my house. All of a sudden a police officer drives up... probably in response to one of my neighbors complaining about the noise (which really was not very loud... but they again I live across the street from it.) Any way, he pulls up and parks behind some of their cars that where parked outside the entrance (which also happens to be right across the street from my house.)

Keep in mind it is nearly midnight and the kids are deep in the park. The cop blurts his siren a few times to try and get their attention... in my neighborhood, right across the street from my house. I'm sitting at my window watching him. The officer steps out of his car with a blinding flashlight and then starts pointing the light into the windows of people's houses, probably looking to see if he woke anyone up. He points it in my face and then shuts the light off. He walks into the park and I don't hear anything for another 3 or 4 min.

Then soon after, a bunch of kids run out and get into their cars and speed off. (Some of them speed off, others don't leave). So what does the cop do? He goes right for the kids that are in the parked car... I guess it is a rational decision, but he never calls in anything saying that the other kids where speeding away. He tests the people in the parked car with a few road side tests and this goes on for like 10 min. Finally they where free to leave and THEN he calls in that the other kids sped away.

Then again, he points his flashlight into the houses of the people around, and again in my face. He said something to me when he saw me, but he was too far away for me to hear him and I don't really care what he had to say.

But the guy was such a dick about everything, I just wanted to go out and punch him in the face..
