Send the child to a children's hospital, then. That's where I donate my money to, anyway.

The problem with universal healthcare is that I don't necessarily benefit from the money I spend. Sure, that makes me a selfish bastard for wanting to benefit from what money I pay out, but it's my money, and if I want to benefit from it, then I should be able to.

No system is perfect, but there is a lot of good that comes from privatized healthcare. You see people flying to America for medical care. Why? Because we have innovation and technology achievable because of Capitalism. Sure, it only affirms that people are greedy, but it works.

I've noticed a huge difference between me and people who want a universalized health system. I don't spend other people's money because of my convictions. I think it's horrible that people have to suffer, but I see the consequences of playing to my emotions. I not only encourage my government to steal from my fellow Americans, but I allow for technology to slow down because there's no achievable capital gain. Sorry my political views aren't more Utilitarian.

Sorry, but I choose quality over quantity.
