SSnipe wrote on Sun, 06 July 2008 05:23 So i went to my sisters house and she had a mac instead of windows since i never messed around with one i thought i should try and come to find out i love them but why dont macs crash like windows do?

They crash a lot, and are very slow. But the thing that really annoys is that as soon as you want to change a little setting, its incredibly hard to find that place that does it. Mac's are usually used by people that dont know much about computers and dont care to learn. But as soon as the users "knows something" and starts to install 3rd party software (e.g. better video player, ICQ, MSN and so on) its as reliable as a PC.

SSnipe wrote on Sun, 06 July 2008 05:23 windows crash every 5 fucking minutes all iv had is windows since i was younger....why are macs better and why do they crash so much?

If you buy prebuilt computers and know something about computers, do a fresh install. Every godawful manufacturer wants to cram their whole line of halfassed software to it, which people will never use. A well built and maintained PC wount crash ...and dont use Vista, it just sucks.
