

---

Subject: Re: Election betting thread...

Posted by cheesesoda on Sat, 02 Aug 2008 15:14:49 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Cabal8616 wrote on Sat, 02 August 2008 10:28Ahahahaha. Even though I'd consider myself a Libertarian, seriously, no one ever ACTUALLY votes for people who would ACTUALLY change things. There are so many people with actually good ideas, but because they don't do alot of "behind the scenes" work like the Democrats and Republicans do, they just don't get the votes.

Americans favor someone who says they'll change shit, but in reality, they fear change. Yeah, I pretty much said that, didn't I?

I'm not going to be a part of the problem. I'm going to be a part of the solution. Voting for anybody outside of what you believe in is a wasted vote. It's that simple. Voting for the lesser of two evils is still (1) an evil, (2) not going to change anything, and (3) being complacent, and complacency is never good for liberty.

---