A lot of people believe that Obama is something 'different' , but when get past his oratory skills, and cult status, he's actually a regular politician; he's moved to the center, and has made quite a few 'flipflops' on the way; some of his moves are also opportunistic. In fact, he's even taken a page out of George Bush's book, and has worn his religion on his sleeve contrary to McCain, who really wants nothing to do with religious wing-nuts.

I have an issue of the July 12th 'Economist' which has a good page by their Lexington correspondent on Obama's changes in position. I can't find it posted anywhere online, but I might try and scan it, as it is interesting.
