
Subject: Re: Palin speech...your impressions...
Posted by nikki6ixx on Thu, 04 Sep 2008 05:05:06 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Pundits are saying she exceeded expectations, and I think she performed exactly how the Republicans wanted her to. I was hoping there'd be more mention of 'policy' , but I suppose that'll come later in the election; besides, it's not as if 'policy' was a big deal at the DNC anyways, unless you count "Hope" and "Change" as policies. Really, it was a case of getting her out there in front of voters to see what she's all about.

If she maintains the exact same attitude while debating Joe Biden, it'll make for one interesting face-off... if it were Mitt Romney, or Lieberman, Biden would try to tear them a new one, but he's going to have to be tactful with her because gender will be a factor. Biden has tasted his foot more than a few times already, and if he slips up, she's going go from 'hockey mom' mode, to the full on 'barracuda with lipstick' shtick.

It looked as if Giuliani's speech made a lot of people uncomfortable at moments, but I enjoyed it. Huckabee's European jab was a good one, and I also liked the self-sufficiency jab too.
