Subject: Re: Red Alert 3 buying survey
Posted by TD on Wed, 08 Oct 2008 05:38:03 GMT

Surth wrote on Tue, 07 October 2008 20:29No? games being pirated was caused by people not wanting to buy them legally. Sorry to burst your bubble.
I'll blast a bubble in ur face

DRM sucks, people buying the game will have a harder time playing it than people downloading and cracking it. It's basically like 'Hey, we can't stop all the people who download it, so let's just make it harder for the people who actually buy it legally to pirate the game!' And they achieve this by not allowing these people to install it more than 5 times, whereas people who download it can install it as many times as they want.

IMO, the game should be protected by its own serial like RA2, allowing only one game to be connected with one valid serial for online gameplay. EA is basically focusing on protecting the WHOLE game (including single player), which requires this stupid DRM protection.

I vote, all download RA3 until EA decides to remove the DRM fully.