Any support for something that they cover would be generally slowed. Not to mention if anything suddenly happened to the site or what ever, all of its services would be down.

That's why I think it is better for Renhelp.net to be hosted by a different management that has a lot less to worry about. It would insure better support for the site and its users as well as more time that could be contributed to site maintenance.

About the support, it would not be slowed because renhelp will probably have its own staff team

And about the site going down, well yea if game-maps were to go down it would all go down but how often have you seen game-maps go down?
