It's this attitude that'll kill America.

No, it's my kind of attitude that is the only hope to save America.

American's need to realize that the president is not a king and he does crap for the country! The only thing that the president is good for is declaring war and vetoing bills... yea, that's some important guy...

America's government is supposed to be run with the people's consent. But thanks to the American people getting lazy these past decades, they just let the government do what ever and sit back while the country goes down the drain. The only reason why people are upset and concerned about the Obama being president is because they are too selfish and lazy to actually want anything to do with their country and expect it to be ran on its own. And now that people aren't very confident in Obama, they are getting uneasy. Well it serves them right, imo.

The only problem I see now is that people who do actually care for the country are going to have to suffer for the laziness of their fellow Americans.
