The problem is not that the other forum will have info, it will have partial information. People that only visit that forum will think it's complete information and not come here to check out the full info.

It's like saying: we have been releasing our source code for years on this site; now that there's a new site, one of us goes to release his new stuff on both sites, rather than go to the new site and invite them to come over here where we not only have all new releases of all coders but also an overview of everything that has been released before.

Besides that, i truely don't believe that EA should have any chance of taking over these forums, for the simple reason that they're incapable of doing so in the long run. I mean... they swapped forum software and didn't even bother to convert their oild database: they just started from zero again. Imagine if Crimson would do so, she'd get a shitstorm all over her...
