Subject: Re: Why did you vote for Obama?
Posted by DarkKnight on Sun, 07 Dec 2008 15:26:15 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Ma1kel wrote on Sun, 07 December 2008 00:18Darkknight wrote on Sat, 06 December 2008 12:00Ma1kel wrote on Sat, 06 December 2008 09:08u6795 wrote on Fri, 05 December 2008 15:38Ma1kel wrote on Fri, 05 December 2008 09:47u6795 wrote on Wed, 03 December 2008 15:41cheesesoda wrote on Wed, 03 December 2008 11:49The vast majority of Christians believe that homosexuality is wrong, and they work tirelessly to keep Gay Marriage illegal. That doesn't mean, however, that there are no sane Christians deserving of a vote. Even if Obama is/was a Muslim, if he keeps his faith's teachings from mixing with government, then I don't see the problem.
The thing with Islam is that it's insanely strict, so if a Muslim were elected President or any high office in America he'd be forced to make the choice of taking huge amounts of flak from his religious community or the political community for his choices. Basically, god or country. Hopefully by running for public office a Muslim would have already made the choice for country.
Toggle SpoilerSame with Christianity and pretty much every other kind of that bullshit. Christianity is a little more lenient in many aspects than Islam (I'm in no way denying its violent past) and many of its ideals are aligned with the ideals of American politics. Probably explains why almost all (or all, I forget) of our Presidents so far have been Christian.

I think religion is evil in and of itself, though, I'm just sayin.
They're both based on Judaism. But nobody takes christianity seriously so...

i guess I'm a nobody then good luck stoning infidels and adulterers (includes divorced people)

Yeah thats the only thing us Christians do