No, but is that any sillier than claiming he was the physical incarnation of a god?

No, but at least claiming that he his is believable, unlike claiming he is an alien.

One just says insanity, the other just says "I'm looking for attention."

There are mental cases nowadays where people go insane and what not, believing they are something they aren't... what makes you think that Jesus couldn't be?

I never said Jesus could not be insane. I believe that when it comes to "miracles", you have to consider the relative probabilities. If any of the reported writings concerning Jesus are reliable (we already have to make a pretty generous assumption right at the beginning of this argument) you have to weigh the odds that he truly was the incarnation of God, compared to the odds that he was insane, lying, or honestly mistaken (which may count as insane in many peoples' eyes).

Although, you seem to've misinterpreted my statement. I wasn't referring to Jesus being claimed to be an alien/God by Jesus, I was referring to Jesus being claimed to be an alien/God by modern humans.
