I think you missed our point. You need experience to run a community. This is something you don't have. Learn how to develop websites, maintain servers, avoid security threats, and then take a wack at the big leagues.

You will never get a community going the way you're trying. Trust me. I've worked on a lot of large websites before. Those free forum sites are a bad place to start by the way. Take the time to learn the skills to setup a board. Free forum websites will get you absolutely no where!
