Have the people who keep going on about how Microsoft shouldn't bundle IE with Windows given any thought to how exactly they would go about downloading their browser of choice WITHOUT having an existing browser to get to said browsers website with? In that respect it's absolutely essential that Microsoft include a browser with their operating system, otherwise nobody could get online.

Personally, I use IE to go and download Firefox. That's my personal preference. But if it wasn't available to me, how on earth would I get Firefox in the first place? One thing I would like is the ability to easily UNinstall it later on mind you.

I don't hear anyone complaining about Apple bundling Safari with their operating system.
