Mixing optimism and politics can only end in tears.

I am not at all happy that he has filled his administration with rabid gun-banners; I see only bad things to come from that angle. As for the rest, well... we shall see where we stand in four years' time. I doubt very much that Mr. Obama is going to deliver the miracles everyone seems to expect of him, but if he leaves the country in better shape than he found it I'll at least be willing to concede that he did his job well. Running an effective campaign does not automatically mean he'll be a competent President. Again, time will tell. The proof is in the doing, not in the promises.
