Neither Deathlink nor cAmpa designed the HUD to do that. The person who did that said that they were doing it to learn and practice different ways to write and implement code. They also said it would never be released to the public.

So stop your bias and thoughtless comments. Anyone with half a brain can see that you aren't really that diehard about hating the stuff that is released and are just looking to get on the nerves of people who appreciate his/there work. It's quite obvious you are only looking to start problems.

And don't give me "It's my opinion!" crap. This sort of opinion is the one better left either to yourself or a single comment of disagreement. Not 50 posts offensively saying the same thing and a separate thread to go with it. That basically just screams "I want attention!"
