AFAIK about python it is a language independant of operating system.

I mean with that that it will work easily on both Windows and Unix/Linux   (if im right)

About the way to get to C++ programming: I would suggest doing PHP and than moving to C++.

My story :
I started at school with making webpages (HTML/CSS) and in my spare time tried some PHP beside it. Very easy to learn actually   (Now we also do it at school too and it is really easy, that i made my exam flawless (11/10 points)) Just when i started with PHP at school i imideately started at C++ because PHP was already to easy for me (but that's me) and now im already trying to write scripts.dll
