Hurr, no. That's the stupidest logic. Using your reasoning, people should be allowed to do whatever they want and have no worry about ruining their "first" chance until they're banned permanently. Only "permanent" is anything but with your logic.

Tell me, how is suspending someone's account for an allotted time considered "giving them another chance?"

It's just showing how the admin could have just as easily banned him permanently, like now. Why should we disregard everything trooprm02 has done, and all the trouble he has caused, and the many times he was warned and suspended, and just let him back in again?

Seriously, that's like someone robbing a store right after they're let out of jail for the 5th time, and they only put him back in for just a week.

Anyways, we (I, atleast), don't give a shit if he thinks he's "rehabilitated" or is a better person. I don't want to have to put up with him and these kind of arguments all over again.
