I've never had a crash/freeze/etc on my PC that I haven't caused personally (accidentally, of course). On the other hand, the few macs I have used have had memory leaks out the ass. Apple just preaches to the computer-users who don't know what they're doing, refuse to learn, and refuse to accept any responsibility for their problems.

Despite Apple's smear campaign, Windows-based systems still maintain a large majority of computer-users. They are the industry standard, and that's what I look for in an operating system. Not rounded edges, not a slick advertising campaign, but will it run what I need it to run. For Macs, the answer is usually no (Unless I dual-boot Windows LOL!), and for Windows the answer is almost always yes. I'm a little surprised there is even a discussion on it.
