smart people.... because they hate to do errors twice.

@topic

In germany its fairly actuall and something pretty present in the media. But at least I slowly grow tired ofthis whole "remember the past" yes. We germans done horrible things to a good part of the world and we are not proud of it, but sometimesl ask myself when its time to cut with it and stop paying for our mistakes and work like a modern country.

Today we build new monuments to the victims, our government want to make sure that every 10th grade pupil visits a concentration camp (actually highschool-only, all others can do it, but usually don't becauseof money/lack of discipline)

If a government official says something negative about israel he's usually screwed. Oh and if Israel requests something its usually immediatly done.

I would say pretty much every week there is something in the news...

So a directly answer to your question:

Most germans (say 95%) don't deny it, but we prefered to be seen as something else as the country-created-out-of-hitler-germany. Always remember, we are already the second generation after the war. Most of those 3rd Reich officials are either dead or in prison if possible, a few days ago the USA even help us get our hands on one of those jailors... And if he is declared sane+healthy enough he will get his punishment even 60 years after the incident.
