Skier222do u think if i got more memory that would help?

My video card sux ATI Mobility 6 32MB

my dad gave me an idea. i could sell my notebook to my sister for college, then from that money save up for a better Notebook.

More system memory won't help, it's the graphics card that needs more memory, not to mention raw horespower. If you're serious about playing games though, get a desktop. I had a laptop alone for about a year and a half, and basically all I could play was System Shock 2 and Half-Life mods. I DID manage to play the entirety of Jedi Knight II singleplayer, but that was with much persistence. Now that I have an uberl33t computer, I hardly use my laptop anymore except for DVDs in the car traveling.

If you really want a laptop that has enough horsepower to play recent games, you're talking some serious cold hard cash.
