<http://www.htmlgoodies.com> has easy-to-browse FAQ-type questions and answers on the basics, so if you run into a problem, that site can probably help you.

I just use Notepad when coding HTML, but Dreamweaver is a compiler that a lot of people I know use. It's not free though, so you'd have to buy it.

I'd recommend just learning to hard-code HTML and do it in Notepad. It's cheap because you don't need to buy a compiler, and you'd be able to use any compiler out there once you knew straight HTML in and out.
