
Subject: Re: Childish n00bstories behavior
Posted by R315r4z0r on Mon, 17 Aug 2009 01:30:10 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

nikki6ixx wrote on Sun, 16 August 2009 19:54 People from both Exodus and n00bstories collaborated on a 'boys vs. girls' game, which included players from other communities as well. The charge is that someone with power in n00bstories had prevented the NS participants from playing the match today, because of its links to Exodus. The extent of this 'prevention' or the consequences of playing in the match haven't been fleshed out yet, though. Thank you for that, now I have an opinion.

You have the right to play in any match you see fit, regardless of the "team" or "clan" you are apart of opposes you doing so.

If you really want to, but your clan wont let you, then that means that clan isn't right for you and you should leave. You can't argue with their rules and policies, you either obey them or leave. They set up the clan and they give you the privilege of playing with them. So you can't dispute their policies because you don't like them. That's why if you come across something radical that you don't like, you should leave them and never look back.
