
Subject: Re: Childish n00bstories behavior
Posted by Spoony on Wed, 19 Aug 2009 10:42:56 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Crimson wrote on Tue, 18 August 2009 22:24: It doesn't matter who. This person was warned repeatedly to stop doing something and refused, so I banned him for 30 days. He whined to EA about it and EA asked me to unban him. I explained why the ban was placed and politely refused. After the ban time was up, gradually this person and I got past our differences and get along fine. So, I see no reason to drag his name through the mud. The point was simply that grant89uk actually thinks that EA has ANY say whatsoever in how I choose to run these forums when it could not be farther from the truth.

I don't think there's anything truthful you could say about that incident that COULD "drag my name through the mud". You certainly said a great many untruthful things at the time, and apparently got other people to do so too, including your own brother (!? who the fuck manipulates a family member just to get them to flame someone on the internet for them?)

Quote: This person was warned repeatedly to stop doing something and refused, so I banned him for 30 days.

Untrue.

Quote: He whined to EA about it and EA asked me to unban him.

Hmmm. I read quite a lot that I supposedly 'begged EA to get me unbanned', from all sorts of renesources. Again, totally untrue. I didn't ask to be unbanned; at the time the forums were run so badly that I had no great desire to come back. What I did do was express some concerns I still believe were totally valid. I will be candid here; back then, your actions were appalling. By your own statements, you were pissed at me for telling EA things about you they "shouldn't have ever known about". That alone ought to ring alarm bells

This exodus business, by comparison, seems pretty trivial.
