I don't believe time travel is possible. I've heard this theory somewhere, don't remember where though - but it goes something like this. The only thing that exists is the present. If someone went back in time, they would essentially be going somewhere that didn't exist and then probably cease to exist themselves, disappear basically. The future also hasn't been created yet, hence it does not exist either. In the future they haven't created working time machines, because there is no future right now. In a sense we're all time traveling, just going at this exact pace.

I think this theory is a pretty damn good one. It basically fills in all the holes.
