Yeah I understand how the connection could be made in someone's head, but I think one should at least ask the store owner for clarification, or do a quick google search for "Imam Ali" (which is what I did), before jumping to that conclusion.

That'd require some common sense and thought process, which is in short supply these days.

That's proven in the story itself: the person who was trying to spread this said it "made him sick", when he didn't even know what he was talking about.

I do agree the store should have explained it in at least a sentence or two on the sign.
