You are also not allowed to debate the points fix without knowing the facts and figures in the original post in this thread.

It thoroughly explains the facts and figures behind the points fix.
so does that mean that unless one goes through and read that post, their opinion is invalid?
I for one think that the points fix should be optional.

You might as well be saying nation-wide health care is a bad idea without knowing all the facts.
Sure, you have the right to, I suppose. But you don't look like any less of an idiot for doing so.
