I still don't see how I was covering anything up, from what I could tell you two were arguing on some other topic, which I assume was here in one of the sections, and some of it spilled over into the topic on Jelly. All I did was delete it because it was in the wrong place, it's not some conspiracy.

and yet it clearly wasn't in the wrong place at all. how do you explain the absolutely staggering number of truly worthless posts on those debate threads that you DIDN'T delete? i shouldn't have to spell this out. go read the original ladder thread; there was a grand total of one person on the anti-pointsfix side who actually debated the issue maturely. everyone else just resorted to the usual insults and character assassination your community subjects me to every time they're furious at losing an argument and want to shift the humiliation somehow.

and if clearshot's nonsense was sufficiently irrelevant that it wasn't interesting to you and raven didn't care either, this begs the question why didn't you delete any of THAT? (the answer's obvious - he's on the anti-pointsfix side, and the person he was attacking was pro-pointsfix. so it doesn't matter if he cheats, doesn't matter if he lies again and again and again to make the other person look bad. like i said, you can get away with any bullshit you lie if you're on the anti-pointsfix crowd, but if you're pro-pointsfix you get treated with contempt despite doing absolutely nothing wrong.)

but oh no. when there's a vote about the pointsfix and your side CATASTROPHICALLY loses, it is immediately - IMMEDIATELY, homey - deleted. and when i explain what actually happened, that's IMMEDIATELY deleted too.

you're either up to your neck in this or you're pathetically incompetent at what you're trying to do.
