AircraftkillerHow many times have I had to write this?

A majority of the users dont follow these forums, or any other for that matter. You going to have to keep doing this as long as you want to support this version of the map.

PiMuRholsn't it a bad idea to rely on people already having other files to run your maps?

Yes, it is. This view point is the standard business practice for in any type software released (updates excluded). You can't rely on the user to be as informed as the developer (i.e. undisclosed requiired files).

Yes, I can see how it's more efficent to develop it this way, but it's a pretty big flaw from an end user stand point.
