am i making that particular instance up, then? let me elaborate. we also pm'd each other asking who the other was.

You are by no means making it up, you are just remembering the instance completely wrong. The guy asked me to a 1v1, because he said that i was something along the lines of "a noob cheater." Then when i accepted, he said that he didn't want to anymore, because 1v1s proved shit. You then joined in the conversation, stating that 1v1s do prove something, and they are difficult to get good at. I then agreed with you, so we pm'd each other, telling each other our real identities.

correct

Sorry, couldn't help but laugh.

Quote:In other words, you get enjoyment out of every argument you go into? Interesting.

well, it's better than being angry when proven wrong, and participating in debates despite the fact you hate them...

My cause is to attempt to eventually get it in your head that you are being an ass by debating every little thing that may or may not be wrong, in your opinion. If that fails, at least everyone else can see through the bs easier, hopefully.

Quote:i didn't say it was amusing to debate, i said it was amusing when people behave as pathetically as e.g. you did in the pointsfix debate, although you are by no means the only one. i also did not intentionally try to make you angry... you got angry all by yourself. You should be a comedian. While everyone else was attempting to avoid another pointsfix debate, you were looking to start another one, to try and clear a few things up, that weren't cleared up in the previous topics.

Quote:

i did not say you are in an anti-spoony club, or associated with each other at all. i will say, however, that for all three of you, your reasons for despising me are equally feeble.

Loki hates you because you won't let him play cw.cc, nunega hates you because you are an ass. I hate you because you must start an argument every chance you get. Equally feeble?

Quote:

i suppose it wouldn't be. thankfully that isn't what happened at all, so your post isn't relevant either.

You still think that someone else said something about you to start the debate, and you were just there defending yourself? Are you even reading the same topic as me?

Quote:go back and read the post of TD's i was originally replying to. there's nothing insecure in that. i didn't particularly feel i needed to stick up for my own leadership, but i sure was going to stick up for my team's organisation.

Quote:

It's like you were begging people to see that you were a big aspect in the win.....

i don't particularly care whether anybody sees that.

Quote:

because that was the one and only comm match i've led where my team totally didn't listen to the leader.

Quote: and my strategy worked flawlessly on volcano...

but we did it better... again, thanks to superior leadership and teamwork

Quote: it indeed was my leadership and our superior teamwork that won the game.

Quote: just so long as they follow the leader we won't go too far wrong.

Quote: the fact i'm sure quite a few other players - better ones - were positively encouraged to play by the prospect of me leading the team.

Quote:...yet if i didn't tell as many people to take the hill as i did, your arties would've overcome the MRLSs earlier. we only just killed the obelisk before the MRLSs were beaten back. fewer MRLS and fewer hotwires, even one or two, probably = ob survives

I seem to be lost once again. You don't care, yet you need to keep telling everyone over and over again....what did i miss?

Quote:i think you're the one who needs to read the topic again, buddy. you posted a huge list of entirely wrong statements, and me and a couple of others pointed that out. then you started freaking out.

What was something i posted wrong? It was an argument over OPINIONS, you cannot have a WRONG opinion. The facts that i posted backing up my opinions were not wrong at all. I could say that you were proven wrong, because my opinion was superior to yours too, but honestly, i'm not that desperate to "win" an argument.

Quote:you made a fool out of yourself, champ. like i said at the time, there's no shame at all in admitting you were wrong about something, even if you were wrong as categorically and as often as you were in that thread. the shame comes when you try to pretend it never happened, or act like your opponent did something wrong just because he outwitted you.

What? Outwitted? It's not like we were playing a sport, it was basically me stating my opinion, you getting all angry because you didn't agree, so you quote spammed me for a good 4 pages. I left for a weekend, and came back to find you claiming you "beat" me. Yet you don'r care if you win or lose an argument? What?

Quote:

... interesting, since you're the one who keeps posting in random threads trying to attack me (despite the fact i've done no wrong to you), not the other way around.

This happens to be the ONLY thread where i was the one to start an argument with you. I felt it necessary, as I really want you to see what you are doing, in making a douchebag out of yourself, and others can see it as well. It's not hard to see through what you are trying to do, I'm sure by now nearly everyone can see it...

Quote:

the original pointsfix debate, the one in which you started your furious renerage against me despite me doing nothing wrong to you, was quite peaceful until you started bawling like a baby at being wrong.

Let me go back to my lettering usage:

A. Opinion's cannot be wrong.

B. There was no debate before your post, that had anything to do with the pointsfix, besides the word "pointsfix", you felt you needed to clear more things up, so started it again there.

C. Bawling like a baby, please, bring proof, quote me "bawling like a baby." Making stuff up is rather pathetic Spooky.

Quote:and if you react badly to being refuted, it does not automatically follow that the opponent did something unfair in the process, any more than losing a game of renegade means the enemy must have cheated.

This is the like, what, third time you have posted this? Yet you fail to respond to me saying that I don't get how you can cheat in an argument on a forums, for a 8 year old game. I never once said anything you did was unfair, i never once said you "cheated", and i never once said i lost or won the argument, it was between people stating how they think the pointsfix is for the better, and for the worse....not a winning or losing case. I still think my points made outweighed your points made sufficiently too, honestly. Yet i don't go saying i won 100 times over again, just to attempt to anger the opponent.

Quote:Quote:

We get it, the fact that you led, helped to win the games for renforums, there is no need to keep proving your point but there is a need to repudiate what TD and rcmorr said.

Yet you clearly haven't acknowledged what we have said, so yes, yes there is.

I'm almost done feeding birdseed to the already fatass bird, don't worry.
