Subject: Re: Secondary Monitor and Vid Card Question
Posted by slosha on Thu, 28 Jan 2010 23:34:21 GMT

Wiener wrote on Thu, 28 January 2010 02:08cant say about your card but I had many problems with setting up my dual screens decently when I switched to win7.

Just want to add that you should run your monitor on any other than its natural resolution to keep quality
Really? It seemed really simple to me. Maybe it's because I had Vista and you didn't? It seems to be exactly the same. And why wouldn't I run it on the monitor's native resolution? It would be blurry if I set it to a lower resolution, and it doesn't accept signals higher than 1280x1024.

So can anybody else answer my question about the vid card? I'm assuming the options are only there because that's the highest resolution at the time the OS was last updated, but I'm not sure because I would buy a bigger monitor if Google lied to me.

Also, while this topic is up, is this a good monitor? I'm not looking for a super-sweet monitor, I just want it to get the job done while still being OK for gaming and has to be cheap.