She'll be up against Mitt Romney, and Mitt would have it in the bag because he'd be highly favoured by the business contingent portion of the party, and has successfully governed Mass. On top of that, Scott Brown's win also gives Mitt an edge, both in funding, and in general appeal on the Eastern Seaboard. Yeah, exactly. Most people realize Obama hasn't done shit to help the economy, despite what he says. It's one of the reasons his popularity went down the toilet rather quickly- guy's done nothing but spend more than Bush has, and that's like trying to race a helicopter to the top of mount everest. So chances are likely, they'll want someone who'll actually do something to help the economy out. I just hope he isn't overly religious and continues the regular Republican bullshit of banning certain social rights.
