I don't know. It really depends on what types of contracts were ended and what his position was.

If he was some high level executive or something, then it makes sense that if someone saw it they would want to end a contract with him. It really doesn't have to be a racist issue...

While it is his right to put up whatever he wants to without censorship, it's also in the rights of the contract holders to end someone's contract for whatever reason.
