No, you misread me.

The government controls the media to the degree that they don't want the public going into a panic if something bad were to happen.

It's not about making one group look better than another, which might be the case from time to time anyway, but it's about the government thinking without the consent of the people.

From the government's perspective, it's better to keep the public ignorant of matters that they believe they can handle in secrecy.
